

Next Stop: City Bus

Open Call Artist Brief - Photographer

Introduction to K6 Gallery

Founded in 2015, K6 Gallery is an exhibition space in the centre of Southampton that makes use of a pair of iconic grade II listed red phone boxes. Designed by architect Sir Giles Gilbert Scott in 1935, the K6 (Kiosk 6) model was the sixth incarnation of the red phone box, a smaller and more streamlined version of the K2 model.

The gallery runs a diverse programme of exhibitions and events in non-traditional art spaces, engaging audiences by showcasing both local and national artists with a focus on contemporary and conceptual art.

Introduction to Next Stop: City Bus

In 1993, Southampton City Council commissioned poet, Carol Ann Duffy and photographer, Nancy Honey to make new work for a project called CityBus. The artists were asked to write poems and take photographs whilst travelling on Southampton's buses; the resulting work was then exhibited on board, unwittingly involving the public in its content and consumption.

2018 marks 25 years since this relatively unknown project took place; we'd like to celebrate the occasion by exhibiting the work again at K6 Gallery and re-commissioning the project, inviting two new artists to contribute. The aim is to reunite the public with the original works to provide a rare insight into local cultural and social histories, as well as delivering a new, contemporary reinterpretation of the project.

The Brief

The commissioned photographer will spend time riding Southampton's Bluestar 17 bus, observing passengers and passers-by and experiencing the city through this popular mode of transport. During this development and production period, the photographer will produce a photographic series inspired by the experience.

This brief is open to artistic interpretation. There is no prescribed format for the work, it can be analogue or digital. The only requirement is that the outcome is photographic response.

Whilst the work might refer to the original City Bus project in format, style, or content, it should also have a distinguishable contemporary twist. Please see Appendix 1 for examples of Nancy Honey's photographs, exhibited in the 1993 City Bus project.

The photographs will then be exhibited on the Bluestar 17 bus and at bus stops along this selected route. The exhibition will last three months. During that time, the commissioned poet will be expected to deliver an Artist Tour.

The selected poet's work will also be included in an exhibition publication.

A BIZARRE art gallery has been revealed by Southampton City Council — a double-decker bus.

The number 22 bus launched a project which will see the whole Citybus fleet bedecked with photographs and poems.

The project by the council's Art in Public Places team has turned the fleet into a mobile gallery.

Artist and photographer Nancy Honey has spent 12 months taking photographs of bus travellers on random trips through Southampton which are used on the fleet.

And writer Carol Ann Duffy has contributed poems reflecting on what it is like to travel by bus in the city.

Public Art officer Rosy Greenlees said: "The largest group of people who travel by bus — generally the very young or older people — are often excluded from the arts.
